2K Games and developer Positech Games have announced that Forza Horizon developer Playground Games has been awarded a contract to create games based on WWE2K for the next three years. 2K Games VP of Global Brand and Franchise Development John Drake says, "With each year, our collaboration with Playground Games improves, with WWE2K the results are nothing short of spectacular. Playground Games has created a fresh and exciting new approach to WWE2K, and we're incredibly excited to be working together to continue bringing players the latest, greatest and most authentic WWE experience possible." In the announcement, 2K Games also revealed that Playground Games CEO David Hunt has joined the 2K Games Senior Management Team. Playground Games' Chief Creative Officer, Paul Rustchynsky, said, "We can't wait to begin work on our next WWE2K game. The quality of the wrestlers, the social interactions and the deep customization are some of the best parts of WWE2K. They're all hallmarks of the Playground Games engine and we're thrilled to be using them in the creation of our next WWE2K game." 2K Games has also released a new trailer for WWE2K15, which you can check out below: God of War: Ascension Announced, Trailer Shows New Gameplay The God of War series returns with a brand new title in the upcoming installment, God of War: Ascension. IGN's own review says of the game, "Overall, Ascension is a great addition to the ever-growing catalog of PlayStation 3 games. Ascension is enjoyable, and gives players a new perspective on the series, while retaining the core gameplay from the previous games."
